

Measurement and Monitoring Architectures for JANET

Work is underway to develop a measurement and monitoring architecture for JANET.

This session will briefly outline what is currently being used on JANET and will then describe the ongoing trials that are informing the development of a JANET measurement and monitoring architecture. It will also explore other possible features of such an architecture, such as the inclusion of flow data, as well as other related issues such as time synchronisation between measurement points.