

Richard DuFeu, The University of Lancaster

Richard du Feu has worked for Lancaster University since graduating in June 2001 in various roles, initially as a solaris administrator for his old department (Environmental Science) before moving to Information Systems Services as a technician maintaining the residence network. After a year he was promoted to become a fully fledged networker with primary responsibility for the residence network, network security for internal and external networks and roll out of core infrastructure in the Lancaster University Network Services WAN. Outside of work he is a very active member of the British Trust for Ornithology's bird ringing scheme.
